In 2000, President Bill Clinton proposed a Palestinian-Israeli peace agreement in which the Palestinians would receive an independent state, which included Gaza and nearly all of the West Bank, using the 1967 green line, exchanging Israeli land for larger settlements. It made East Jerusalem the capital of the Palestinian state, with control over Palestinian quarters of the Old City. Yasir Arafat rejected this offer. The borders must be those in place before 1967, including Gaza and the West Bank, with a territorial link between them, and East Jerusalem as the capital. We must have full control over airspace and territorial waters. And settlers living on lands that are not theirs must leave. We will not agree to continued Israeli presence, military or civil, within a future Palestinian state."*
